Practices of found footage and media archeology:

Artists gather source material from thrift stores, garage sales, flea-markets and dumpsters.

Is there still data on the hard drives?

Can we recover data?

What do we have to consider when we use it as found footage?

BEHIND THE SMART WORLD ARTLAB – ARTISTIC STRATEGIES FOR DEALING WITH RESURFACING DATA

by KairUs - Linda Kronman and Andreas Zingerle

Breaches of Western information security thanks to a rise in electronic waste circulation have been particularly pronounced in Ghana, where a certain cadre of citizens has taken to searching out information on Westerners' old hard drives for extortionate purposes.<sup>1</sup>

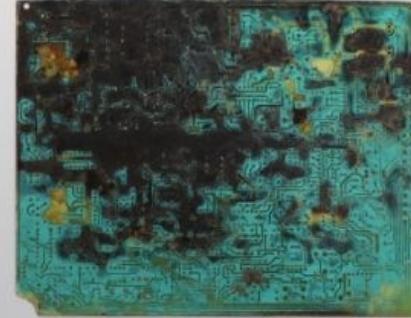

Since 2010 we as KairUs artist duo have focused on researching topics such as spam, scam and Internet fraud. In August 2014 our research had evolved to the stage that we needed to take a field trip to West Africa, where a considerable number of so called advance fee fraud originates. Rather than hunting down scammers in Internet cafés, we were interested to see which technological affordances or limitations the scammers were faced with in this part of the world. In our initial research we came across reports about an electronic waste dump called Agbogbloshie. In the middle of Ghana's capital Accra, in this toxic wasteland by a lagoon, is where our electronics from developed countries are illegally dumped. Jennifer Gabrys examines in her book Digital Rubbish<sup>2</sup> in detail how electronic waste ends up at e-waste dumps such as Agbogbloshie: first they linger in

We are an on-call collective called Health Watch, who specialise in disease prevention. We're here to help you make the most of mobile triggers. Disease Screening provides for education, advice, support, signposting, training and more through our health clinics. Each one of these can run from 10-12 weeks to 12 months. When we're not in the office, we're on the road, visiting schools, colleges, business premises, community groups and other social media platforms. We're here to provide you with the best advice on self-health and prevention.

Measures of the concentration level and spatial extent of the organic pollutants in the air of the residential areas in the city of Tbilisi were made by the methods of gas chromatography and atomic absorption spectrometry. The results obtained made it possible to determine the types of organic pollutants in the air of the residential areas in Tbilisi.

If you have problems in writing the letter, you can contact us to identify the information you need to be able to write it. We approach our job, not from a position of help, but from a position of support.

LETTER FROM THE CEOs

Dear Friends and Business Partners,
We are pleased to present our first annual report. This report highlights some key figures of our first 1000 companies, providing a unique insight into our business structure.

With regards to the phishing issue, we have taken several steps to address it. We have implemented strict measures, including legal action against offenders, and are actively working on a solution to prevent it from happening again.
